Law of Large Numbers

The law of large numbers says that the average of the results of a number of trials should be close to the expected value of the total population, and will become closer as more trials are performed. The law of large numbers is one of the most useful and powerful phenomena in statistical inference and reasoning.