

Macroeconomics

Macroeconomics is the study of the broad economy. It is the study of how and why economies experience business cycles; and it is the study of how government policy affects these business cycles. Macroeconomics also concerns how one nation's economy and economic policies affect its neighbor's economy and economic policy. Of primary concern in macroeconomics are such issues as gross domestic product (GDP), inflation, interest rates and imports and exports.