

Microeconomics

Microeconomics is the study of the economy at the level of the individual (and more specifically) the individual firm. The health of the general economy, government policy and international developments are of secondary importance in microeconomics. How individual firms meet demand, allocate scarce resources, and turn a profit are of primary concern in microeconomics.